b a simple narrative of humble life, clothing a mestic history of exquisite pathos in language no remarkable for its subtle delicacy and grace an the silvery music of its rhythm and expression. The scene is laid in one of the obscure maritime villages of England, which the descriptions of Crabbe have made so familiar to the readers of poetry A hundred years ago the beach was frenented by three children of the little town, tation, Philip Itay, the miller's ton, and Enoch Arden, the orphan boy of a rough salior, who had erished by a Winter a storm upon the coast. The note of the story is struck in the opening pages.

A nerrow cave rau in beneath the cliff: In this the children play do the chilf:
In this the children play do the coping house,
Fracch was host one day. Philip the next.
White Amne sail was mistrees; but at times
Enoch would hold possession for a week:
This is my house, and this my little wife.
Mine, too, said Philip, 'man and turn about:
When, if they quarted, Enoch, stronger made,
Was master: then would Philip, his blue eyes
All flooded with the helpless wrath of teurs.
Shriek out—'I hate you, Enoch;' and at this
Tae little wife would weep for company,
And pray them not to quarted for her sake,
And say she would be little wife to both.

The sake the asset of two childhood wasted.

But when the dawn of rosy childhood passed,
And the new warmth of life's ascending and
Was fett by either, oither fix his heart.
On that one girl; and Enoch spoke his love,
But Philip loved in silence; and the girl
Beem'd kinder anto Philip than to hum;
But she loved Enoch, tho' she knew it not,
And would, if ask deep it. Enoch set
A purpose evermore before his eyes.
To floard all savings to the uttermost,
To purchase his own boot, and make a home
For Annie; and so prospor'd that, at last,
A buckler or a bolder inherman,
A carefuller in peril, did not breaths
For leagues along that breaker-beaten coast
Than Enoch. Likewise had he served a'year
On board a merchuntunan, and made himself
Yall seller; and he thirtie had plack d a life
From the dread sweep of the down-streaming seas:
And all men look'd mon him favorobly:
And ere he touch'd his one-and-twentieth May
He porchased his own boot, and made a home
For Annie, neat and neatifich halfway up
The narrow streat that clamber'd toward the mill.

In due time the happy pair were wedded; seven presperous years glided peacefully by; health and competence fell to their lot; the quiet dwelling was gladdened by children:

gladdened by children:

First a daughter. In him woke, with his first habe's first cry, the noble wish To save all cornings to the nitermost, And give his child a better bringing up Than his had been, or hers; a wish renewed. When two years after came a boy to be The rosy dole of her sollindes. While becoch was abroad on wrathful seas. Enoch at times to go by laud or sea;
And once when there, and clarabering on a mast
In harbor, by mischance he slipt and feel:
A limb was broken when they lifted him:
And while he lay recovering there, his wife
Bore him another son, a sickly one:
Austher hand arent too across his trade
Taking her bread and thefret and on him fell,
Altho' a grave and staid God fearing man,
Yet lying thus inactive, doubt and gloom.
He seem'd, as in a nightmare of the night.
To see his children leading evernore
Low miscrable lives of hand-to-mouth,
And her, he loved, a boggar then he pray'd.
Bave them from this, whatever comes to me.
And while he präved, the mister of that ship
Enoch had served in, hearing his mischance,

ut the plan by no menus met with the approval

But the plan by no means met with the approval Annie. She realsted its accomplishment, with weet and gentle insinuations, "manifold entrea-Mes, many a tear, many a sad kiss, by day, by night renewed," entreating him by all his love for her and his children not to go away and leave them. Booch was set on his purpose and would not be persusded to remain. The hour for parting came, and the loving pair bade each other farewell.

But when the last of those last moments came,
Annie, my girl, cheer up, be comforted.
Look to the babes, and till I come again,
Keep everything shipshape, for I must go.
And fear no more for me, or if you fear
Last all your cares on God; that anchor holds. Is He not youder in these uttermost
Parts of the morning i if I like to these
Can I go from Him i and the sea is His,
The sea is His: He made it.

Enoch rose,
Cast his strong arms about his drooping wife,
And kiss'd his wonder-stricken little ones;
But for the third, the sickly one, who slept
After a night of fevrous wakefulness.
When Annie would have raised him Enoch said
Wate him not; lot him sleep; how should the child

child
Remember this v and kins'd him in his cot.
But Annie from her babyls forehead clipt
A tiny cirl, and gave it: this he kept
Thro all his future; but now hastily caught
His bundle, waved his hand, and went his way.
The invalid child faded from day to day, and at fast escaped like a bird from its eage. The boy Philip, now a stalwart miller, here makes his appeerance on the scene.

In that same week when Annie buried it, Philip's true heart, which hindrer'd for her peace (Since Enoch left he had not look'd upon her), (Since Enoch left he had not took'd upon her),
Smote bim, as having kept aloof so long.
Surely, said Philip. I may see her now.
May be some little confort, therefore weng.
Past thro' the solitary room in front.
Paused for a moment at an inner door.
Then struck it thrice, and, no one opening.
Enter'd, but Annie, sented with her grief.
Fresh from the burial of her little one.
Caret not to look on any harmon face.
But turned her own toward the wall and wept.
Then Philip standing up said faiteringly.
Annie, I came to ask a favor of you.

He spoke, the passion in her mosn'd reply Favor from one so sad and so forlors As I am' haif abach'd him; yet mask'd, His bashfulness and tenterness at war, As I am' haif abash d him; yet umash d.
His bashfulness and tenderness at war.
He eet himself beside her, raying to her:
'I came to speak to you of what he wish'd.
Emoch, your husband: I have ever said
You chose the best among us—a strong man;
For where he first his beart be see his hand.
To do the thing he will'd, and hore it thro'.
And wherefore did he go this waary way.
And leave you lonely had to see the world—
For pleasure i—nay, but for the wherewithal.
To give his babes a better bringing up
Than his had been, or yours: that was his wish.
And it he some again, wat will he be
To flud the precious morning hours ware lost.
And it would was him even it his grave.
If he could know his babes were running wild
Like soits about the waste. So, Annie, now—
Hare we, not, know a cach other all cur lives! I do beseech you by the love you hear
Him and his children not to say no nay—
For, if you will, when Emoch comes again
Why then he shall repay me—if you will,

Now let me put the boy and girl to school—
This is the force that I came to as he Now let me put the boy and girl to school— This is the favor that I came to ask.

The good intentions of Philip are carried into revident genius for the family. The boy and girl put to school. All the wants of the family he anticipated in a quiet, kindly way, though unwill-Ing to tempt the "lazy gossip of the port," he letting his return be known.

Senies the dearest wishes of his heart, and seldom crosses the threshold of the house. To the chil-

ENOUGH ARDEN, Le. By ALFRED TENNYSON. 12mc. pp.
201. Boston: Ticknow & Fields.

The chief poem in this small, but precious volume, a simple permittee of hundry precious volume, Enoch. At last, Philip, who had always cherished his faithful love, is convinced that the time has come to speak of it.

Annie, there is a thing upon my mind And it has been upon my mind so long.
That the I know not when it first came there,
I know that it will out at last. O Annia That the J know not when it first came there, I know that it will out at last. O Annie Itis beyond all hope, against all chance, That he who left you ten long years ago Should still be living; well, then—let me speak: I grieve to see you poor and wanting help: I cannot help you as I wish to do Unissa—they say that women are so quick—Perhaps you know what I would have you know—I wish you for my wife. I fain would prove A father to your children: I do think They love me as a father. I am sure That I love them as if they were mine own; And I believe, if you were fast my wife. That after all these sad uncertain years. We might be atill as happy as God grants To any of His creatures. Think upon it: For I am well-to-do—no kim, no care. No burden, save my care for you and yours! And we have known each other all our lives. And I have loved you longer than you know. Then asswer'd Annie; tenderly she spoke: You have been as God's good angel in our neuse God blees you for it, God reveard you for it, Philip, with something happier than myself. Can one love twice I can you be ever loved As Enoch was! what is it that you ask? I am content, he naswered. 'I obe laved A little-after Enoch.'s 'G, she cried. Sensed as it were.' dear Philip, with a while: If Enoch comes—but Effects will not come—Yet wait a year, a year is not so long! Strely I shall be wiser in a year.
O wait a little 'I Philip sadly said, Annie, as I have writed all my life! I well may wait a little.' Nay, she cried, I will be dead thane of the fallen day.
Here both were mute, till Philip glancing up Echeld the doad thane of the fallen day.

And I billip abswor'd, 'I will bide my year.'

Here both were mute, till Phillip glancing up
Beheid the dead fisme of the fallen day
Pass from the Danish barrow overhead;
Then fearing night and chill for Annie rese.
And sent his voice beneath kim thro' the wood.
Up came the children laden with their spoil;
Then all descended to the port, and there
At Annie a door he peased and gave his hand,
Saying gently, 'Annie, when I spoke to you,
That was your hour of weakness. I was wropg,
I am always bound to you, but you are free.
Then Annie weeping answer'd 'I am bound.'

Still, Annie puts her suitor off as long as possible, but finally yields to his urgent persuasions.

So these were wed and merrily rang the bells, So these were wed and merrily rang the bells,
Merrily rang the bells and they were wed.
But never merrily bent Annie's heart.
A footstep seem'd to fall beside her path,
She knew not whate, nor loved she to be left.
Alone at home, nor ventured out alone.
What ai'd her then, that cro she enter'd, often
Her hand dwelt lingeringly on the latch,
Fearing to enter: Philip thought he knew:
Such doubts and fears were common to her state,
Italing with child; but when her child was born,
Then her new child was as herself range wed,
Then her good Philip was her alcheall,
And that mysterious instinct wholly died.

The story now changes to relate the fortunes of Enoch since his unlacky departure from kouse and home. The bold mariner made a successful out-ward-bound voyage, but the return was full of disaster. The ship was stranded on a lonely island, and every soul perished but Enoch and two others. They were thrown ashore, and became the sole in-habitants of that solitary land. After a few years his companions die. Enoch was left alone, reading in their deaths God's warning to wait.

The mountain wooded to the peak, the lawns And winding glades high up like ways to Heaven. The lasticing glades high up like ways to Heaven. The lasticing flash of insect and of bird. The lasticing flash of the second flash of the world. All these he saw; but what he fain had seen. He could not see, the kindly human face. Nor ever hear a kindly voice, but heard. The myrind skrieb of wheeling occan-fowl. The league-long roller thundering on the red. The moving whisper of large trees that branch'd And blossomed in the senith, or the sweep of some precipitous rivulet to the wave. As down the shore he ranged, or all day long Sat aften in the seaward gazing gorge. A shipwreak'd sailor, waiting for a sail; No sail from day to day, but every day The sunrise broken into scarlet shafts Among the palms and feris and precipices; The blaze upon the waters to the west; The blaze upon the waters to the west; The blaze upon the waters to the west; Then the great stars that globed themselves in Heaven.

Heaven. The bollower bellowing ocean, and again There efter as he watch'd, or seem'd to watch,

There externs he watch d, or seem'd to watch, So still the gedden lizare on him paused, A planton made of many plantons moved Before him handing him, on he limself Moved handing people, things, and places, known Far in a darker lide beyond the line; The babes, their babbis, Annie, the small house, The climbing street, the nillt the leafy lanes. The peaceck yewires and the lonely Hall. The norse he drove, the boat he sold, the chill Nevenber dawns and down glooming downs, November dawns and dewy glooming downs, The gentle shower, the smell of dying leaves. And the low moan of leaden-color'd reas.

Once likewise, in the ringing of his cars, Once likewise, in the ranging of a way—
The factity, merrity—far and far away—
He heard the pealing of his parish bells;
Then, the he knew not wherefore, started up
Shaddering, and when the beauteous, hateful isle
Return'd upon him, had not his poor heart
Spoken with That, which being everywhere,
Lets none, who speaks with Him, seem all alone,
Surely the man had died of salitude.

Thus the sunny and rainy sensons came and went rear after year, Enoch still hoping to see his own, and pace the old familiar fields, when his lonely doom is brought to a sudden end. A ship is cast upon the coast, Enoch succeeds in making himself known to the astonished mariners; he is taken off; and carried to the very harbor from which he had sailed so many years before.

Then down the long street having slowly stolen, His heart foreshadowing all calamity, His eyes upon the stones, he reach'd the home Where Annie lived and loved him, and his babes In those far-off soven happy years were born; But finds a neither light nor murmar there (A bill of sale glean'd thro' the drizzle) crept Still downward thinking 'dead or dead to me!

Down to the pool and narrow what he went.

Seeking a tavera which of old he knew.

A front of timber-crost antiquity.

So propt, worm-caten, ruinously old,

He thought it must have gone; but he was gone
Who kept it; and his widow, Miriam Lane,
With daily dwinkling profits held the Louse;
A haunt of brawling seamen once, but now

Stiller, with yet a bed for wandering men.

There Enoch rested ellent many days.

But Enoch yearns to look once more on the sweet face he had loved so well, till haunted by the thought, he takes a doll November twilight to seize a stealthy view of the dear ones who now belonged to snother.

Now when the dead man come to life beheld Now when the dead man come to life beaeld His wife its wife no more, and saw the dabu Hiers, yet not his, upon the futher's knee. Secrining an alms, to work whereby to live.
Almost to all things could he turn his hand.
Cooper he was and carpenter, and wrought
To make the beatmen fishing nets, or help'd
At lading and unlading the tall barks,
That brought the stinted commerce of those days;
Thus earn'd a peanty living for himself:
Yet since he did but labor for himself:
Work without hope, there was not life, in it
Whereby the man could live; and as the year
Roi'd uself round again to meet, the day
When Enoch had return'd, a languor came
Upen him, gentlo sickness, gradually
Weskening the man, till he could do no more.
But lept the house, his chair, and last his bed.
And Enoch bore his weakness cheerfully.
For sure no gladher does the stranded wreek
